Buckeye's Robert Alt Sat Down with IdeaStream's Ashton Marra to Discuss Janus v. AFSCME

The Buckeye Institute's president and CEO Robert Alt, talked to IdeaStream's Ashton Marra about Janus v. AFSCME and the impact it could have on protecting the First Amendment rights of Ohio's public employees.

In the interview, Alt said in regards to public employees being forced to pay agency fees, "You don't have a choice then on how it is that the unions use that money in terms of speech, what they advocate for. That's really the core of this case."

Buckeye's Robert Alt, Rea Hederman, and Lisa Gates traveled to Washington, DC, for the oral arguments in Janus v. American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, Council 31, and a rally in support of Mark Janus and hard-working public employees this morning.

Robert Alt (center) with Mark Janus and Rebecca Friedrichs outside the U.S. Supreme Court after oral arguments.

Before they left, Robert commented on the union rally in Columbus on Saturday, saying:

"While some claim Janus v. AFSCME is an attempt to weaken unions, The Buckeye Institute filed an amicus brief demonstrating that unions can still thrive without compulsory dues. What will change if Mr. Janus prevails is that our hard-working public servants, even those who disagree with the unions, will have their First Amendment rights protected and respected. And that is something all of us should rally behind."

Before getting in line at 5:45 a.m. to attend the oral arguments this morning, Robert wrote a piece for National Review commenting on the funding of Janus v. AFSCME, saying, "What is surprising is the fact that Mark Janus is personally funding a cadre of high-priced lawyers with one goal: making sure that Mark loses his case."

After the oral arguments, Robert again offered his expert opinion to the press and his reaction to today's hearing, saying:

"What Mark, and others before him have done is not easy, but it must be done. It is immoral for the government to force hard-working public servants to pay for political speech with which they disagree under the threat of being fired. It is also unconstitutional."

Robert Alt talks with media about the Janus v. AFSCME oral arguments and what the case means for public employees.

While Robert was in the courtroom today, Buckeye's Rea Hederman was on the steps of the Supreme Court speaking at the Stand With Mark rally outside the Supreme Court.

To fix the gaming of graduation requirements, we need to overhaul high schools and our policies governing them

By Michael J. Petrilli

We armchair-quarterbacks of education have made a complete hash of the policies governing high schools and what's expected of young people seeking to graduate from them. Our first mistake was to set sky-high goals around graduation rates, while allowing local officials great discretion in defining what it takes for students to earn a diploma. Our second big error has been to resist anything resembling tracking. Until we fix these problems, we should expect the cheating and gaming to continue. Read more.

Look beyond four-year graduation rates

By Peter Greene

Pressure to inflate grades, bogus credit-recovery courses, and plain-old D.C.-style fraud don't happen just because school districts are under pressure to graduate students. They happen because districts are under pressure to graduate students "Right Now! In Four Years!" argues a classroom teacher with almost forty years of experience. For all the reform talk these days about personalization and flexibility, we still deny public schools the option to say to a student, "We are going to get you through this. We are going to see you succeed, even if it takes a little bit longer than it does for some of your peers." That ought to change. Read more.

Tie high school graduation to student attendance and passing grades

By Peter Cunningham

At a time when people are questioning the validity of high school diplomas, student grades and attendance are effective metrics for determining whether a young man or woman deserves to graduate, argues the executive director of Education Post. Both are based on reliable data points that are unlikely to be corrupted if schools, districts, and states effectively design and oversee them. The metrics also put parents in a good position to judge school quality. Read more.

WHERE IS THE NEXT "EDUCATION GOVERNOR"?

On this week's podcast, Mike Petrilli, Chad Aldis, and Alyssa Schwenk discuss what it will take to get gubernatorial candidates to embrace ed reform. During the Research Minute, Amber Northern examines the cost effectiveness and return on investment of charter schools in eight American cities.

PARTICIPATE IN FORDHAM'S 2018 WONKATHON:

In light of diploma scandals in D.C., Maryland, and elsewhere, do our graduation requirements need to change?

For several years now, the Thomas B. Fordham Institute has hosted an annual "Workathon" on our Flypaper blog to generate substantive conversation around key issues in education reform. As in in the past, this year's competition tackles an important and pressing issue. A recent investigation revealed that several high schools in Washington, D.C., skirted district rules to graduate large numbers of students who didn't meet the standards for earning diplomas. And there are reasons to believe this type of malfeasance is happening in plenty of other places. It's not hard to understand why. For a decade now, school administrators have dealt with federal, state, and local pressures to hand out more diplomas. And everyone knows that a student's life chances without a diploma are bleak. Thus the temptation for educators to ignore graduation requirements has been pervasive. That's no reason to excuse cheating, but it does point to a larger systemic problem and a bona fide policy dilemma. So this year we are asking contributors to address the following question: What standards should students meet to graduate from high school? If you're keen to jump in—and we hope you are—click here to learn more about how to participate.

Conversation and language development

By Jeff Murray

Solving the “thirty-million-word gap” is not as simple as pouring more language into a child's ears until she catches up with her peers. New research from a team at MIT points to “conversational turns”—defined as an adult utterance followed by a child utterance, or vice versa, with no more than a five-second pause between the two—as the best predictor of scores on standardized tests of vocabulary, grammar, and verbal reasoning. These findings were independent of parental education levels, socioeconomic status, and the amount of language to which children were exposed in the home. Read more.

Are charter schools more cost-effective than traditional public schools?

By Nicholas Munyan-Penney

There's little research on how effectively charter and traditional public schools use their dollars to produce academic gains. So let's welcome a new report from Corey DeAngelis and his colleagues at the University of Arkansas that examines this issue in eight U.S. cities. They find that, for every $1,000 in school funding, charter schools produce an average of 4.34 more points on NAEP reading than traditional public schools and 4.73 more points on NAEP math. And in each locale, charter-goers enjoy higher projected lifetime earnings. Read more.

Let's make sure graduates actually know what's in the state standards

By Elliot Regenstein

A fundamental cause of today's graduation rate scandals is that districts are being held accountable for students satisfying metrics like grades and attendance that districts alone measure, says a partner of Foresight Law + Policy. As long as that is the case, the pressure to game the system will always be there. A better approach is for states to set standards that schools and districts can't finagle, like whether students have deep content knowledge in core subjects. In other words, start making graduation conditional on mastery. Read more.

The art and science of charter school authorizing

By Michael J. Petrilli

For a quarter-century, those who oversee charter schools have tried to solve one of toughest problems in public life: How can public entities ensure that service providers do their jobs effectively and for a good price, without micromanaging them into mediocrity? David Osborne urges the government to "steer instead of row" by outsourcing the provision of these services to for-profit or non-profit entities, and holding them accountable for results. But this is not always easy in practice. Into this squall comes a new NACSA study on effective authorizing that's useful, authoritative, and nuanced. It doesn't pretend that there are easy solutions to the many dilemmas that afflict authorizers. Read more.

Behind the curtain of Ohio school choice

By Jessica Poiner

Whether it's a low-performing school, one that isn't the right fit, or both, tens of thousands of Ohio families have found themselves searching for a better place to send their child. The Buckeye State is considered a national leader in school choice, so in theory its families should have a menu of educational options. But in reality it still excludes far too many of the families that need them most. This is why thoughtful state policy is so important, and why Ohio lawmakers can and ought to do better. To fix the gaming of graduation requirements, we need to overhaul high schools and our policies governing them

By Michael J. Petrilli

We armchair-quarterbacks of education have made a complete hash of the policies governing high schools and what's expected of young people seeking to graduate from them. Our first mistake was to set sky-high goals around graduation rates, while allowing local officials great

discretion in defining what it takes for students to earn a diploma. Our second big error has been to resist anything resembling tracking. Until we fix these problems, we should expect the cheating and gaming to continue. Read more.

Look beyond four-year graduation rates

By Peter Greene

Pressure to inflate grades, bogus credit-recovery courses, and plain-old D.C.-style fraud don't happen just because school districts are under pressure to graduate students. They happen because districts are under pressure to graduate students "Right Now! In Four Years!" argues a classroom teacher with almost forty years of experience. For all the reform talk these days about personalization and flexibility, we still deny public schools the option to say to a student, "We are going to get you through this. We are going to see you succeed, even if it takes a little bit longer than it does for some of your peers." That ought to change. Read more.

Tie high school graduation to student attendance and passing grades

By Peter Cunningham

At a time when people are questioning the validity of high school diplomas, student grades and attendance are effective metrics for determining whether a young man or woman deserves to graduate, argues the executive director of Education Post. Both are based on reliable data points that are unlikely to be corrupted if schools, districts, and states effectively design and oversee them. The metrics also put parents in a good position to judge school quality. Read more.

PARTICIPATE IN FORDHAM'S 2018 WONKATHON:

In light of diploma scandals in D.C., Maryland, and elsewhere, do our graduation requirements need to change?

For several years now, the Thomas B. Fordham Institute has hosted an annual "Wonkathon" on our Flypaper blog to generate substantive conversation around key issues in education reform. As in in the past, this year's competition tackles an important and pressing issue. A recent investigation revealed that several high schools in Washington, D.C., skirted district rules to graduate large numbers of students who didn't meet the standards for earning diplomas. And there are reasons to believe this type of malfeasance is happening in plenty of other places. It's not hard to understand why. For a decade now, school administrators have dealt with federal, state, and local pressures to hand out more diplomas. And everyone knows that a student's life chances without a diploma are bleak. Thus the temptation for educators to ignore graduation requirements has been pervasive. That's no reason to excuse cheating, but it does point to a larger systemic problem and a bona fide policy dilemma. So this year we are asking contributors to address the following question: What standards should students meet to graduate from high school? If you're keen to jump in—and we hope you are—click here to learn more about how to participate.

Conversation and language development

By Jeff Murray

Solving the “thirty-million-word gap” is not as simple as pouring more language into a child's ears until she catches up with her peers. New research from a team at MIT points to “conversational turns”—defined as an adult utterance followed by a child utterance, or vice versa, with no more than a five-second pause between the two—as the best predictor of scores on standardized tests of vocabulary, grammar, and verbal reasoning. These findings were independent of parental education levels, socioeconomic status, and the amount of language to which children were exposed in the home. Read more.

Are charter schools more cost-effective than traditional public schools?

By Nicholas Munyan-Penney

There's little research on how effectively charter and traditional public schools use their dollars to produce academic gains. So let's welcome a new report from Corey DeAngelis and his colleagues at the University of Arkansas that examines this issue in eight U.S. cities. They find that, for every $1,000 in school funding, charter schools produce an average of 4.34 more points on NAEP reading than traditional public schools and 4.73 more points on NAEP math. And in each locale, charter-goers enjoy higher projected lifetime earnings. Read more.

States cracking down on streaming video while driving

USA TODAY

Georgia isn't the only state to single out streaming as a new danger. A Washington state law, the Driving Under the Influence of Electronics Act, in January was the first to specifically mention video on phones. It even makes it illegal for Washington drivers to sneak a peek at their smartphone when stopped in traffic or at a stoplight, though they can touch a mounted or in-dash screen.

NCSL's Annie Kitch quoted.

Portland Press Herald

The bill, which now goes to Gov. Paul LePage, would let caregivers expand their business operations. For example, they could hire more than one worker, and sell up to 30 percent of their harvest to other caregivers and dispensaries.

THE BUCKEYE INSTITUTE

Following last week's Supreme Court ruling in Janus v. AFSCME, Robert Alt, president and chief executive officer at The Buckeye Institute, looked at what the ruling means for Ohio's public employees and government unions in The Columbus Dispatch (complete piece below).

Alt also had a piece in The Hill, where he wrote, "Consent matters. But you don't have to take my word for it -- just ask the Supreme Court of the United States. In Janus v. AFSCME, the Court's five-member majority held that the First Amendment protects public-sector employees -- including petitioner Mark Janus -- from being compelled 'to subsidize private speech on matters of substantial public concern' without prior affirmative consent."

The Columbus Dispatch

Janus decision protects workers who dissent from union

The Columbus Dispatch

By Robert Alt

July 1, 2018

In Janus v. American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, Council 31, the U.S. Supreme Court decided that public-sector workers must affirmatively consent before any money can be taken from them for union fees.

Since Wednesday's ruling, folks on both sides have unfortunately succumbed to hyperbolic overreaction. The most cursory recollection of our country's founding reminds us that the same idea of consent was integral to empowering the government in the first place. Accordingly, it should surprise precisely no one that the court was concerned with the compulsion aspect of the case's facts.

Plaintiff Mark Janus -- an ordinary child-support specialist at the Illinois Department of Healthcare and Family Services -- objected to paying mandatory union fees as a condition of his employment and lamented, "The union voice is not my voice. The union's fight is not my fight. But a piece of my paycheck every week goes to the union. I am not anti-union... But unions aren't a fit for everyone. And I shouldn't be forced to pay money to a union if I don't think it does a good job representing my interests."

The Supreme Court agreed with Janus that, indeed, consent matters. Common courtesy and basic human decency have always demanded it, but now -- in overruling its own 41-year-old precedent in Abood v. Detroit Board of Education -- the court found that the First Amendment requires affirmative consent when it comes to paying union fees, too.

Writing for a five-member majority, Justice Samuel Alito raised the court's objection to public employees being forced to financially support their unions, "even if they choose not to join and strongly object to the positions the union takes." Such an arrangement, Alito concluded, "violates the free speech rights of nonmembers by compelling them to subsidize private speech on matters of substantial public concern."

Unions will continue to serve their consenting members for generations to come -- only now they will do so more effectively, more efficiently and without trampling the constitutional rights of their members.

Any Ohio unions worried that Janus and other subsequent right-to-work laws will catalyze the end of unions and union membership can rest easy. Empirical studies and data from right-to-work states, including our neighbors Indiana and Michigan, demonstrate that even after enacting right-to-work laws, union membership not only does not suffer but often increases.

In the first full year after Indiana's right-to-work law took effect, for example, the state added 3,000 new union members. Although union membership initially fell slightly after Michigan adopted right-to-work rules in 2013, it has since recovered, accounting for 15.6 percent of all wage and salary workers in 2017 -- up from 14.4 percent in 2016 and well above the national average of 10.7 percent.

After Janus, the quality of public-sector union representation inevitably will improve. Removing coercion and requiring affirmative consent will incentivize union leaders to be more responsive to the needs and desires of their union members, which will increase the value of union membership by refocusing the union's attention on increasing job satisfaction and working conditions for members.

Happier and better-served union members who have affirmatively consented to their union membership should be our shared end goal across the political spectrum.

Public-sector workers won the long-overdue right to be respected, irrespective of their individual decisions regarding union membership. And, in a nation founded upon the consent of the governed, the standard of consent adopted by the Supreme Court in Janus finally gives our hardworking public servants the voice and choice they have always deserved.

Robert Alt is the president and chief executive officer of The Buckeye Institute in Columbus.

Following last week's Supreme Court ruling in Janus v. AFSCME, Robert Alt, president and chief executive officer at The Buckeye Institute, looked at what the ruling means for Ohio's public employees and government unions in The Columbus Dispatch (complete piece below).

Alt also had a piece in The Hill, where he wrote, "Consent matters. But you don't have to take my word for it -- just ask the Supreme Court of the United States. In Janus v. AFSCME, the Court's five-member majority held that the First Amendment protects public-sector employees -- including petitioner Mark Janus -- from being compelled 'to subsidize private speech on matters of substantial public concern' without prior affirmative consent."

Janus decision protects workers who dissent from union

The Columbus Dispatch

In Janus v. American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, Council 31, the U.S. Supreme Court decided that public-sector workers must affirmatively consent before any money can be taken from them for union fees.

Since Wednesday's ruling, folks on both sides have unfortunately succumbed to hyperbolic overreaction. The most cursory recollection of our country's founding reminds us that the same idea of consent was integral to empowering the government in the first place. Accordingly, it should surprise precisely no one that the court was concerned with the compulsion aspect of the case's facts.

Plaintiff Mark Janus -- an ordinary child-support specialist at the Illinois Department of Healthcare and Family Services -- objected to paying mandatory union fees as a condition of his employment and lamented, "The union voice is not my voice. The union's fight is not my fight. But a piece of my paycheck every week goes to the union. I am not anti-union... But unions aren't a fit for everyone. And I shouldn't be forced to pay money to a union if I don't think it does a good job representing my interests."

The Supreme Court agreed with Janus that, indeed, consent matters. Common courtesy and basic human decency have always demanded it, but now -- in overruling its own 41-year-old precedent in Abood v. Detroit Board of Education -- the court found that the First Amendment requires affirmative consent when it comes to paying union fees, too.

Writing for a five-member majority, Justice Samuel Alito raised the court's objection to public employees being forced to financially support their unions, "even if they choose not to join and strongly object to the positions the union takes." Such an arrangement, Alito concluded, "violates the free speech rights of nonmembers by compelling them to subsidize private speech on matters of substantial public concern."

Unions will continue to serve their consenting members for generations to come -- only now they will do so more effectively, more efficiently and without trampling the constitutional rights of their members.

Any Ohio unions worried that Janus and other subsequent right-to-work laws will catalyze the end of unions and union membership can rest easy. Empirical studies and data from right-to-work states, including our neighbors Indiana and Michigan, demonstrate that even after enacting right-to-work laws, union membership not only does not suffer but often increases.

In the first full year after Indiana's right-to-work law took effect, for example, the state added 3,000 new union members. Although union membership initially fell slightly after Michigan adopted right-to-work rules in 2013, it has since recovered, accounting for 15.6 percent of all wage and salary workers in 2017 -- up from 14.4 percent in 2016 and well above the national average of 10.7 percent.

After Janus, the quality of public-sector union representation inevitably will improve. Removing coercion and requiring affirmative consent will incentivize union leaders to be more responsive to the needs and desires of their union members, which will increase the value of union membership by refocusing the union's attention on increasing job satisfaction and working conditions for members.

Happier and better-served union members who have affirmatively consented to their union membership should be our shared end goal across the political spectrum.

Public-sector workers won the long-overdue right to be respected, irrespective of their individual decisions regarding union membership. And, in a nation founded upon the consent of the governed, the standard of consent adopted by the Supreme Court in Janus finally gives our hardworking public servants the voice and choice they have always deserved.

Robert Alt is the president and chief executive officer of The Buckeye Institute in Columbus.

Rotunda Rumblings

Just due it: A “right-to-work” advocacy group has threatened Ohio with a lawsuit if it doesn't immediately stop collecting union dues from non-union state workers. But cleveland.com's Jeremy Pelzer reports that the agency that handles payroll for state employees hasn't taken any action so far in response to the June 27 U.S. Supreme Court decision in Janus v. AFSCME.

Moving forward: Supporters of a proposed November ballot issue that would set new standards for dialysis treatment and cap what for-profit clinics can charge submitted more than 475,000 signatures Wednesday, cleveland.com's Kaylee Remington reports.

Also moving forward: Supporters of the "Neighborhood Safety, Drug Treatment and Rehabilitation Amendment" also submitted more than 730,000 signatures on Wednesday in hopes of making the November ballot, cleveland.com's Jackie Borchardt writes. The proposed amendment would reduce penalties for individuals convicted of nonviolent drug and drug paraphernalia possession crimes and direct the cost savings to addiction treatment and crime victim programs. The secretary of state's office has until July 24 to certify each proposed amendment collected at least 305,591 valid signatures.

All aboard: Columbus will have Ohio's first self-driving shuttles by December, writes cleveland.com's Laura Hancock. The city, state and Ohio State University are seeking proposals for companies that can operate a shuttle service downtown.

Back from the dead? The Libertarian Party of Ohio has filed petitions this week to regain Ohio "minor-party" status for the first time since the 2014 election. As Pelzer explains, if the party can get on the ballot this year, it's likely to run Columbus filmmaker (and anti-Gov. John Kasich satirical group founder) Travis Irvine for governor.

Jordan fights back: U.S. Rep. Jim Jordan, in an interview with reporters on the Fourth of July in Fremont, Ohio, again disputed claims that he knew Ohio State wrestlers had been sexually abused by a team doctor. Cleveland.com's Sabrina Eaton rounds up the latest in the nationally publicized story, including Jordan's assertion that an ex-wrestler making the accusations has sent him harassing emails.

Inside the Statehouse: Ohio officials laid the first cornerstone for the Ohio Statehouse 171 years ago. Cleveland.com's Laura Hancock shows the building's rich history with 16 images.

He's running: Literally. Cleveland.com's Seth Richardson caught up (no easy task) to Republican Attorney General Mike DeWine on the Fourth of July doing one of the things he loves best: marching in parades.

Richardson has an entertaining time-lapse video of DeWine logging nearly 8,500 steps before noon. The GOP gubernatorial nominee was of course accompanied by his wife, Fran, handing out her legendary cookbook.

Where are they now? The status of about 2,300 former students from the shuttered Electronic Classroom of Tomorrow is unknown, the Associated Press reveals. Many students from the controversial online charter school transferred to other schools, but the state doesn't know what happened to the rest, the AP reports.

No reply: "Records show more than 200 courts across Ohio failed to respond to Gov. John Kasich's executive order seeking more information on their history with the national background check database used in stopping gun-related crimes," reports Julie Carr Smyth of the AP. Those that didn't respond were mostly small mayor's courts, the report says.

Kasich, the anti-Trump: The governor is out with another op-ed, this time decrying President Donald Trump's trade war. The piece appears in the Financial Times.

Unfinished business: Ohio lawmakers sent a lot of bills to Gov. John Kasich before they took a summer break. But they left some high-profile legislation hanging, reports Carr Smyth of the Associated Press. That includes payday loan restrictions and a controversial "stand your ground" bill.

Preventive measures: The Washington Post looked at the case of the 4,000 eggs and embryos that were lost at the University Hospitals fertility center. The Post report features an interview with Ohio Sen. Joe Schiavoni who is working on a bill "he hopes will help prevent such disasters in the future and introduce penalties for fertility clinics that violate the new safeguards," Post reporter Ariana Eunjung Cha writes.

For what ailes you: If you're wondering whether your illness would qualify you for legal medicinal marijuana in Ohio, Borchardt created a handy list of medical conditions.

Full Disclosure

Five things we learned from the April 9 financial disclosure statement of state Rep. Jeff Rezabek, a Dayton Republican who is resigning to become a Montgomery County Juvenile Court judge. Gov. John Kasich appointed him to the new post Monday.

1. Rezabek reported earning $25,000 to $49,999 last year as an attorney in private practice licensed in Ohio and New York. He made $65,476 as a lawmaker, according to the Ohio Treasurer's office.
2. At some time in 2017, he owed at least $1,000 to Nelnet, Fifth Third Bank, Day Air Credit Union, Bank of America, Credit First, N.A. and U.S. Bank. His campaign committee, Citizens for Rezabek, owed him at least $1,000 at some point last year.
3. The Ohio House reimbursed him $3,197.38 for mileage between home and Columbus. The Ohio Judicial Conference gave Rezabek $173.25 for a hotel room during its annual meeting in Columbus, when he participated in a legislative panel. The Ohio House Republican Organizational Committee paid for $133.40 in travel. The Ohio Chamber of Commerce paid for his $69 lodging at its Policy Conference at Salt Fork in September. The Campaign for Fair Sentencing of Youth paid $487.40 for his hotel, meals and flight to a conference last year.
4. He received an unspecified gift from Virginia Ragan, a prominent Republican donor, worth at least $75.
5. School Choice Ohio Inc. paid $33.66 for Rezabek to attend a "lunch and learn" session March 30, 2017. He received at least one Dayton Dragons baseball ticket last year, worth $20.97, from the Dayton Development Coalition. He also received $58 in food at a Dayton Dragons game from the Dayton Area Chamber of Commerce.

Richardson has an entertaining time-lapse video of DeWine logging nearly 8,500 steps before noon. The GOP gubernatorial nominee was of course accompanied by his wife, Fran, handing out her legendary cookbook.

Where are they now? The status of about 2,300 former students from the shuttered Electronic Classroom of Tomorrow is unknown, the Associated Press reveals. Many students from the controversial online charter school transferred to other schools, but the state doesn't know what happened to the rest, the AP reports.

No reply: "Records show more than 200 courts across Ohio failed to respond to Gov. John Kasich's executive order seeking more information on their history with the national background check database used in stopping gun-related crimes," reports Julie Carr Smyth of the AP. Those that didn't respond were mostly small mayor's courts, the report says.

Kasich, the anti-Trump: The governor is out with another op-ed, this time decrying President Donald Trump's trade war. The piece appears in the Financial Times.

Unfinished business: Ohio lawmakers sent a lot of bills to Gov. John Kasich before they took a summer break. But they left some high-profile legislation hanging, reports Carr Smyth of the Associated Press. That includes payday loan restrictions and a controversial "stand your ground" bill.

Preventive measures: The Washington Post looked at the case of the 4,000 eggs and embryos that were lost at the University Hospitals fertility center. The Post report features an interview with Ohio Sen. Joe Schiavoni who is working on a bill "he hopes will help prevent such disasters in the future and introduce penalties for fertility clinics that violate the new safeguards," Post reporter Ariana Eunjung Cha writes.

Full Disclosure

Five things we learned from the April 9 financial disclosure statement of state Rep. Jeff Rezabek, a Dayton Republican who is resigning to become a Montgomery County Juvenile Court judge. Gov. John Kasich appointed him to the new post Monday.

1. Rezabek reported earning $25,000 to $49,999 last year as an attorney in private practice licensed in Ohio and New York. He made $65,476 as a lawmaker, according to the Ohio Treasurer's office.
2. At some time in 2017, he owed at least $1,000 to Nelnet, Fifth Third Bank, Day Air Credit Union, Bank of America, Credit First, N.A. and U.S. Bank. His campaign committee, Citizens for Rezabek, owed him at least $1,000 at some point last year.
3. The Ohio House reimbursed him $3,197.38 for mileage between home and Columbus. The Ohio Judicial Conference gave Rezabek $173.25 for a hotel room during its annual meeting in Columbus, when he participated in a legislative panel. The Ohio House Republican Organizational Committee paid for $133.40 in travel. The Ohio Chamber of Commerce paid for his $69 lodging at its Policy Conference at Salt Fork in September. The Campaign for Fair Sentencing of Youth paid $487.40 for his hotel, meals and flight to a conference last year.
4. He received an unspecified gift from Virginia Ragan, a prominent Republican donor, worth at least $75.
5. School Choice Ohio Inc. paid $33.66 for Rezabek to attend a "lunch and learn" session March 30, 2017. He received at least one Dayton Dragons baseball ticket last year, worth $20.97, from the Dayton Development Coalition. He also received $58 in food at a Dayton Dragons game from the Dayton Area Chamber of Commerce.

"I normally only give this to mediocre college football coaches."

- Toledo Mayor Wade Kapszukiewicz, while presenting a key to the city to Congresswoman Marcy Kaptur. Kapszukiewicz took some flak from Ohio State University fans and the University of Toledo earlier this year for giving a ceremonial key to University of Michigan football coach Jim Harbaugh. Harbaugh, a Toledo native, headlined an event there in May that raised $100,000 for legal aid services.
